Treating Myself Well

A gentle discussion guide for our mental health group

There are no right or wrong answers — just honest reflection. Choose the questions that speak to you most.

Reflecting on Self-Kindness

1. What does "treating yourself well" look like on an average day?

2. If you began treating yourself like someone you were deeply responsible for loving and protecting, what is the very first daily habit that would have to change?

3. When you make a mistake, what does your inner voice sound like? Is it a voice you would ever permit someone else to use when speaking to you?

4. Think of the qualities you value most in a close friend or partner (e.g., patience, loyalty, forgiveness). How consistently do you offer those exact qualities to yourself?

5. In what areas of your life do you notice the biggest gap between how you treat others and how you treat yourself? (e.g., work, body image, emotional slip-ups).

Boundaries & Expectations

6. If an acquaintance consistently made the same demands on your time, energy, and mental health that you make on yourself, how long would you keep them in your life?

Boundaries & Expectations (continued)

7. How does setting healthy boundaries with other people influence your ability to respect and take care of your own needs?

8. What unrealistic standards or expectations do you place on yourself that you would never expect a loved one to meet?

9. Reversing the dynamic: Do you find it harder to give kindness to yourself, or to open up and receive genuine care and help from others when they offer it?

Shifting to Self-Compassion

10. Think of a recent challenge or failure. If a friend came to you with this exact issue, what would you say to them? How can you say those exact words to yourself right now?

11. What is one practical thing you want others to do for you when you are feeling sad or overwhelmed? How can you proactively provide that comfort to yourself?

My Small Next Step

This week, one kind thing I will do for myself is:

Be gentle with yourself — you deserve the same kindness you give to others. ❤
This handout is for reflection and discussion, not clinical advice.